While it's tough to see the effect on tourists as New Zealand has become some of the best-known destinations in the world, local artists are feeling the drop in audience and revenues. As a result, a lot of acts of the scene have been affected financially, which has forced them to make many tough decisions such as canceling all of their touring shows. It has also led to the cancellation of large festivals, which left many artists without much hope of earning in this climate. Unfortunately, there's not a whole lot we can do as we are not in the position to offer them financial relief. Unless you're in the position to support touring artists with pre-orders and tickets, you can do nothing but hope that the situation gets better soon so that everyone can go back to playing shows on a regular basis. Luckily, we've managed to preserve a few shows in both South Korea and Japan that we don't really think you should miss. While most of the shows we're featuring are ones that are not necessarily very popular, we thought that some of you might enjoy them even more. Instead of going to see your favorite bands perform in person, we've compiled a list of one-off shows by internationally-renowned touring acts that you can still see in person, and we're going to be featuring them in our Playlist in the coming weeks. Perhaps one of our most beloved shows ever is back! Kevin and Sylvia are back to entertain all of

Only 1% of UK businesses provide backup to customer data. According to recent research from Elsevier Information Security, only 1% of UK businesses store backup of customer data, or a copy of the data on their company network to ensure that the data stored on a file system can be recovered from a disaster. For example, on average, only 1 out of every 1,000 stores contain backup of customer records and documents in the most recent year. This is despite the fact that data theft is widely recognised as a major threat to the financial health of a business. It is estimated that business data is lost annually due to theft of data from IT systems, with costs associated with the loss of customer data ranging from £750,000 to £20 million. “These results are not surprising given that on average there are more than 50 data corruption events recorded within an organisation each day,” said Fiona Matthews, Head of Global Regulatory Reporting at Elsevier Information Security. “And while customers have continued to sign up to longer term enterprise data backup solutions, most organisations have not yet implemented those in time of the data breach.” In addition, most British businesses do not have the ability to restore lost customer information from a disaster. It is extremely rare for any business that loses customer information to be able to restore all of this data in less than five years. “Data loss is the second most common operational incident resulting in the loss of customer records,” added Fiona. “ba244e880a
