A few years ago I was tasked with setting up a custom user profile service in our production environment for a standard AD user. We used the AD FS website to create our App in the domain root. To get it working we had to create a new site, then add the service application to that site. Then we had to manually add the domain account to the ADFS auth tab on the user profile service properties page. This is all super easy, and it all works great. Unfortunately, when I got this job, I moved into a new corporate domain and we don't have the AD FS website to work with. Instead we're hosted in AWS with the app built there and running on standard windows IIS. After fumbling around I was able to figure out how to do this in the public facing application. We have done this: Turned on authentication (which is all working, including the 'Guest' account). Turned on profile synchronization. The issue comes in when I try to sync from one user profile to another. In order to test this I have a group I need to sync from, and I try to authenticate the 2d92ce491b
