The agreement filed in U.S. District Court on Thursday says the city “agreed to compensate the class for the value of the water lost.” It covers 1,004 single-family residences and approximately 5,000 renters. City officials say the settlement was reached after a lengthy legal battle. Class-action status means that the case will be governed by a judge, not a jury.

Affected residents must pay the city the full cost of the shutoff, less a $50 fee. The legal notice of the settlement said the agreement also applies to all future water shutoffs by the city. Last summer, a federal judge ruled in favor of the city in the lead case of the lawsuit. The city would not provide data showing the number of shutoffs since the original case in 2012.
