"The president is making a lot of claims today that are just not true," Priebus told host George Stephanopoulos. "All you have to do is look at the polls. … I would take a look at the polls. You can actually look at the polls. He's actually getting shellacked." Priebus said that "in this era of polarization we all need to hear from each other." "I think when you're about to lose your way, and we're about to lose our way, then you try to come together to make sure that we're on the right path, and we're not running on the wrong path. And the president is doing that," Priebus said. "I think he's making very bold statements, and I think we need to step back and have a conversation," he continued. "I'm very proud of the way we've been able to work together on the debt ceiling and other stuff. It's time to sit down." At a campaign stop in Cincinnati on Friday, the president said that Republicans had "lost their way," and then added that the "governing body of our country is doing exactly what it's supposed to do: come together, look for the common ground, and make compromises." Democrats lost their majority in the House of Representatives after the November elections, and with the current climate of political discourse, it'

A: Note: From your comments, it seems that you don't want to (or cannot) install the paid version of the program. You can try this free program instead: (It does not seem to be updated for some time, and you won't get any updates, but it seems to work for your use case.) The only downsides are the need to have more than 64 GB of disk space and the slow speed of the conversion. (Reuters) - Glencore XELG.L, the commodities trader controlled by billionaire Switzerland's Ivan Glasenberg, is being sued in the United States for allegedly causing a "$100 billion ecological crisis" by operating one of the world's largest coal mines near the Amazon River basin. The lawsuit, filed by Colombia-based environmental group Friends of the Earth on Thursday, asks for a permanent injunction that would prevent Glencore from mining coal in the Amazon. Glencore XELG.L declined to comment on the lawsuit. The U.S. group's lawsuit is one of the largest environmental claims ever filed against a company, said David Goldberg, a lawyer and environmental activist who is representing the group. Goldberg said the lawsuit alleges that Glencore XELG.L's mines have been the source of significant environmental harm to the world's most important river basin. "This is the single largest mining project in the world 2d92ce491b
