All Games For PC, Home Wandering in Ethiopia Wandering in Ethiopia is a book by Ralph Crane and Martin Rees, published in 1982, which describes the scientific expedition to Ethiopia which it accompanied, and describes the anthropology of Ethiopia, which Crane had begun to study there. The book is a "tour de force" that provides a detailed and accurate account of the fieldwork which was carried out during the second half of the 1980s. It also provides extensive details about a number of the ethnographic sites visited. The book is considered to be an important and influential work on the anthropological study of Ethiopia. The expedition was led by James George Frazer, who knew the site which was explored by Crane. The expedition which took place between 1980 and 1982 was intended to determine the nature of the social structure of the Bantu-speaking peoples of Ethiopia, with an emphasis on the spread of the germs of diseases. The book was written by Crane and Martin Rees, who had first met in 1969, when they were doctoral students at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine. Rees had become interested in the anthropology of Ethiopia when he read an article on the subject by Martin Henig, published in the London Magazine. In 1998, a conference on the subject of Wandering in Ethiopia was organized by the Royal Anthropological Institute.
