Donald Trump and President Barack Obama's relationship had to be strained to the point of irrelevance, with the administration of the former being dissolved by the time of the inauguration. Trump felt emboldened after his victory, probably hoping that Obama would give him a second term for his personal ends. Interestingly, Trump's transition into the presidency and afterwards have been riddled with leaks and gossip on the internal squabbles and turmoil inside the White House, all of which has been done for a reason — by the president himself. Now, the Washington Post is reporting that Trump will be announcing as the next CIA director an oil industry lobbyist, a move that could get him into a huge amount of trouble. According to the Post, chief executive of the lobbying firm Podesta Group, Tony Podesta, is close to Trump and is expected to be the man responsible for tapping into oil industry leaders and environmentalist groups to tip the next version of the oil industry regulations in favor of business interests. Podesta is the brother of John Podesta, the former chairman of Hillary Clinton's 2016 presidential campaign, and the lobbying firm he heads has represented the major oil companies like ExxonMobil and Chevron. Ahem, so the CIA director to be will be a lobbyist for the oil industry? My God. According to the Post, Tony Podesta was a political advisor for Clinton's 2008 presidential campaign. Besides his ties to the lobbying firm, the lobbyist is also a longtime associate and friend of the Clintons. During the U.S. Senate campaign, Podesta also advised Hillary Clinton on her fight against Republican opponent George W. Bush in the 2004 election. And then, the lobbyist and Hillary Clinton became friends. During ba244e880a
