A suicide bomber detonated himself at the gates of a Shia mosque in central Syria on Sunday, killing at least five people and wounding dozens of others in the worst attack in the country for weeks. The bomber entered the Bab al-Nasr mosque in Qastel Raba, near the Syrian capital, Damascus, shortly after a congregation had begun prayers, according to three activists who spoke to The Associated Press. The interior ministry said at least five people were killed, and that “dozens” were wounded. “It is a very strong blow to the Syrian revolution,” said Rami Abdul Rahman, head of the Syrian Observatory for Human Rights, which has documented nearly 90 percent of fatalities in Syria’s four-year war. “It is a shocking, shocking and unfortunate day for Syria.” The attack marked the first time since July 2015 that a suicide bomber has targeted a mosque. “A suicide bomber blew himself up at the gate of the Bab al-Nasr mosque in Qastel Raba,” said a member of the Free Syrian Army who spoke to the AP on condition of anonymity because of fear of being targeted for speaking out. “The mosque’s imam was among those killed.” Two Syrian activists provided video to the AP showing a man believed to be a suicide bomber, wearing a camouflage vest, lying on the ground at the mosque gate. Video posted on social media shows people fleeing the mosque after the explosion. The mosque’s entrance was littered with rubble and debris, and a group of people could be seen crying over the body of the mosque's imam. A local activist told the AP that a pregnant woman at the mosque was among the dead, as was the imam's young son. The bombing was likely the work of Al-Qaeda's Syrian branch, Jabhat al-Nusra, which has been trying to take over villages around Qastel Raba in the Hama countryside, according to activists and local news reports. But, as in many other instances, the Islamic State group is often at the fore. The group took over the town last August, and released a video showing a man blowing himself up at a gathering of
