Genomic DNA variations including deletions and insertions occur during evolution. These changes are regarded to have important implications for the appearance of new genes and the functional diversification of genes. In the present study, we surveyed the D-loop region, which includes the origin of light (O(L)) and heavy (O(H)) strands of replication, in the mitochondrial genome (mtDNA) of Primates, Cetartiodactyla, Perissodactyla, Lagomorpha, Scandentia, and Afrotheria. Northern blot hybridization showed that the O(L) region was larger in Primates than in other groups, probably because of the deletion of a unique sequence in the genus Homo. The O(L) region in Primates was preferentially located near the O(H) region, and
