Gamma camera scintigraphy of intraparenchymal liver metastases with the SPECTer detector. The aim of this study was to evaluate the ability of the SPECTer gamma camera to characterize metastases in the liver. We performed liver scintigraphy with SPECTer and planar imaging on 18 patients with known intraparenchymal liver metastases (19 lesions). The scintigrams were analyzed qualitatively and quantitatively (S/P ratios). S/P ratios were > 2.0 in 20 of the 19 liver lesions and > 1.5 in 13 of these. There were no false-negative lesions. S/P ratios were significantly greater for lesions 3.0 cm. S/P ratios correlated with the size of the lesions but not with the number or location of the lesions. The SPECTer detector is a good method for scintigraphic diagnosis of intraparenchymal liver metastases. The level of tumor activity within the liver correlates with the size of the metastases but not with the number or location of the lesions.Q: How does this change in null range operator work?
