If your using a laptop you are better off dual booting because if i would have to go back to Windows 8 I wouldn't have a clue where to start. Windows 8 Home 64-bit is included, but this is practically the same thing as the pro version except for a few features. I have a Desktop, so I went for the Pro. However, before I started the installation, I decided to use the Windows 8 Pro Blue X64-orion DVD to clean install my system, just to be safe. The guide I followed was as follows: Burn the ISO to a DVD. The key difference between the Windows 8 Pro Blue X64-orion DVD and the other CDs and DVDs, is that you can't use them to install Windows 8 Pro Blue X64-orion from an external hard drive or bootable USB flash drive. You can't use them to upgrade your computer either. They are strictly for the purpose of clean installing Windows 8. Create a bootable USB flash drive by inserting the USB disk into the USB port of a computer that is set to use the BIOS/UEFI configuration settings that are installed during the setup process. Boot to the BIOS or UEFI setup screen. Select the option to boot to your hard drive. Select the partition in which Windows 8 will be installed. (In the UEFI setup screen, you will find some list of things such as "first boot device", "primary master boot record", etc. Select Install now. Wait for the installation to complete. Reboot the computer by pressing Esc to the very first screen you see when the computer reboots. At this point, Windows 8 was done. 3da54e8ca3
