There are other photo editing tools on the market besides Photoshop, but Photoshop is a go-to choice for photographers as it works with most other image editing software.

- 1. Manage RGB/GRAY/CMYK Colors When working with raw images in Photoshop, you can use multiple color spaces to work with color-related tasks like editing color or correcting images. A color space is just a different way of organizing the data that is used to represent color on a screen. For example, a computer monitor displays color as a combination of red, green, and blue (RGB) light. Some monitors can display colors via a GRAY space, while scanners use a different color space called a Color Matching Transfer Function (CMYK). The easiest way to change a raw image's color space is to use the dialog box shown in Figure 1. Figure 1: Photoshop's Color Correction Dialog Box Figure 2: Input/Output Options The color space you choose determines what an image's colors look like on your screen. For example, you can use an RGB color space for editing photos, while transferring a scanned image to the Internet or printing it to paper can use a CMYK color space.
- 2. Resize a Document When creating a Photoshop document, you can choose from a number of thumbnail sizes that you can use to shrink an image to fit your document. For example, the current document has a width of 10,540 pixels. To change the size of your current document to fit your needs, you can select the Size menu. Figure 3: Size Menu Figure 4: Changing an Image's Size
- 3. Enter the Photo Editor When you open Photoshop, you will see your current document and a number of blank layers immediately after opening Photoshop. New layers will automatically be added to your document after you import a picture. You can use these blank layers to work with your photo. For example, you can add new layers or change the color of existing layers. A group of layers that share the same settings are called a layer group and can be used to make your photos easier to manage. To access your documents photo editor, shown in Figure 5, first select Edit » Edit In Place or press Alt + CTRL + M (Option-Command-M on a Mac). An all-new, all-American menu Located on Fort Wayne's west side, The Mattress Factory was the last of its kind, a partner to the thrift shops, and the nation's first American-themed shopping concept. The Mattress Factory had the only authentic 100-year-old American-style furniture store in the country, plus a 1950s-style soda fountain and ice-cream shop. And one of its most popular features, America's Store, held a variety of goods that belonged in an American garage. The Mattress Factory is still there today, but its team of creativity gurus – and one of the nation's leading interior designers – Tim Brown, have entered the 21st century. With the help of digital design software, they are transforming their store into a new kind of shopping experience: one that's supercharged by modern technology. A new customer interface. By the end of this year, shoppers will be able to view items in the store and look at price points before even going into the store – a new addition to the shopping experience. "Customers will be able to access all of their items at any time, on any device," says Donny Brown, Mattress Factory general manager. "Like Amazon or Zappos, our system will allow us to pull up all of the items that they have added to their virtual shopping cart at any given time." During peak shopping times, such as Black Friday and the weekend before Christmas, shoppers will also be able to view the price points of all of the items in the store at any given time. Shoppers will no longer have to go to the back of the store to find a product; they'll be able to look up anything at any time, from a specific brand or type of product to a customer's favorite bedding. "In the past, you would walk into the store and either go to the back or just browse randomly," Donny says. "Now you will be able to see everything at your fingertips and select any number of items." More than 1,000 products. The Mattress Factory is taking inventory of thousands of products to accommodate this new customer interface, which will be completed by year's end. "We want to make sure the customer's shopping experience is awesome
