In its European testing of the outgoing B9 Venza, Subaru tested a base and 'Sport' trim levels of the Subaru Legacy. In Europe, the B9 Legacy Sport is available with the same 7-speed automatic as its North American counterpart, but for the European market this gearbox is only available with the manual transmission. But there is some good news for American sports sedan enthusiasts. The 2014 Subaru Legacy will get a base model with a manual transmission, just like our cars. Subaru also made the switch from four-cylinder to a turbocharged and direct-injected 2.0-liter four-cylinder engine that's rated at 181 horsepower and 188 pound-feet of torque. That's considerably more power than the 138 hp 2.5-liter boxer four-cylinder in the North American Legacy. But this new engine still only makes 155 lb-ft of torque which Subaru says will provide sufficient power to serve American drivers. Its real-world performance will likely depend on the final selection of transmission. According to Subaru, the 2020 Legacy will be offered with a 'continuously variable transmission and in manual form, and it will likely be offered in a wide range of additional engine sizes to cover varying power needs. Though we know the majority of Subaru's cars will use CVTs, given the current trend in many auto makers to offer manual transmission as a premium option and with Subaru vehicles traditionally requiring a choice between a CVT and a manual gearbox, we suspect we'll see a manual transmission in the new Legacy. And we'll be right there with them. (Read more: 2014 Subaru Legacy review) Q

Whether for business or pleasure, we are constantly served great steaks. But did you know that the leftovers from those night's dinners could be worth a lot more than we pay for them? Last year, the Washington Post reported on the story of a man named Nick Giarraputo. As the Post noted, he was "perplexed about his high returns from his restaurant [that serves prime rib]." So, he made a deal with his tax man: if Giarraputo paid the taxes on the profits from the prime rib, he wouldn't have to pay taxes on the leftovers. So how much does leftovers from that expensive prime rib actually cost you? According to the New York Times, Giarraputo's top leftovers, the "red most desirable parts" of a prime rib, which he priced at $90 for about 50 pounds, could have easily cost him $600 - $1,100. The Post noted that the high cost of the leftovers was attributed in part to the fact that meat processors pay most of the beef industry's costs. These costs are passed on to consumers, but that doesn't apply to the portion of the beef left over after the meat is chopped for purchase. So while the prices we pay for the first cuts of beef may increase as the meat gets thinner, the cost of the leftovers is not. In Giarraputo's case, the cost was even higher. According to the Times, the actual butcher who was cutting the beef "found the prime rib too small to yield a full steer from, and the meat wasn't worthy of his own private label.
